[1] in 1837, Bishop francis kenrick tried to move his place to Saint John the Evangelist, partly in response to the problems of trust to old people. st. mary. [2] The following year St. Johns became the pro-cathedral while kenrick explored the options for building a separate cathedral for the diocese. eight years after June 29, 1846, Bishop kenrick announced plans to start building a new cathedral on the parkway. [3] this was a daring plan from kenrick, since only two years before St. Augustine was destroyed during anti-Catholic Native American revolts. Moreover, kenrick did not want to take debt to the project and hoped to raise funds from donations from the Catholics of the diocese, who at this time numbered 60,000 in the area of philadelphia. [4] Despite the possible challenges, things started well. Neapolitan the brun, which also built St. Augustine and St. Patrickáá, was assumed as an architect. [5] the building rose rapidly with the corner stone laid on September 6, 1846. [6] However, immediately after the money began to dry, the annual report for the central committee of the cathedral reported that only a small fraction of what was expected to relaunch had been donated. Nevertheless, the committee hoped that the pride of the diocese would contribute to raising the funds as it complained that cities, such as baltimore, pittsburgh and cincinnati, were "less than our [but] have metropolitan churches.[7] the lack of money has led to a stop in the construction in 1849 and the following year the brun wasfrom the role of architect and was replaced by john Notman and John Mahoney. [8] in the next decade, the work would continue to adapt and begin and in 1859 the walls of the cathedral would have beenTwo years before, seeing that the building would not have been completed for years to come, James Frederick Wood, then Bishop coadjutor, ordered the construction of a chapel that parishioners could use to maintain a sense of community. [10] When Wood, , which became bishop in 1860, decided to grant loans to finish the cathedral. With the provision of funds, the works were able to continue without interruption and were completed within four years. On November 20, 1864 the cathedral was consecrated in front of a large crowd, but would not have been consecrated until 1890. [11] While the exterior of the building has been completed, the interior was far from being finished even at the time of dedication, the high altar was not finished and a temporary wood was used. [12] Moreover, there were works of art or decorations that adored the walls or side altars. In subsequent years, murals and art would have been added to pieces, but this has led to a separate aesthetic. Under the guide of the Archbishop Edmond Prendergast, Dagit and Sons realized a restructuring to give a unified interior design. [13] With this, the cathedral finally became a definitive site for the archbishop. In 1956 the interior was redone and twenty years later, on September 14th, the Cathedral was raised to Basilica Minor. [14] Over the years, the Basilica Cathedral of the Saints Peter and Paul has continued to play a central role in the celebration of Catholic life in the city of Philadelphia. History The exact date of the construction of the first Gothic church dedicated to the holy apostles Peter and Paul is not known, but its first mention dates back to 1413. The first parish school in Kaunas at the Church of Saints Peter and Paul was mentioned in 1473. Construction work was not completed until 1624. The church suffered greatly from the military campaign of 1655 and was rebuilt in 1671, acquiring some Renaissance features. Only one of the towers was rebuilt after the roof fire in 1732. As part of the restoration, the interior decorations were financed by King StanisÁjew August Poniatowski in 1771. The high altar, the lectern and the choir were installed by Tomasz Podhajski in 1775. The current shape of the building is the result of further renovation in the 1800s. The church was promoted to a cathedral by Pope Leo XIII in 1895. It received the title of Basilica in 1926, when the Diocese of Samogitia was reorganized into the Metropolitan Archdiocese of Kaunas by Pope Pius XI. The building was included in the Register of Immovable Cultural Property of the Republic of Lithuania in 1996.[2] Pope Francis visited the cathedral on 23 September. September 2018. Architecture The cathedral, 84 m long, 28 m high and 34 m wide, is the largest Gothic church in Lithuania. The Chapel of the Blessed Sacrament, built in 1895, is an autonomous extension of the south aisle with wooden furnishings carved in neo-Gothic style. Burials Motiejus ValanÁius, Bishop of Samogizia, historian and one of the most famous Lithuanian writers of the nineteenth century, was buried in a church crypt in 1875. Near the wall of the chapel is also the neo-Gothic mausoleum of Maironis, one of the most famous Lithuanian Romantic poets. Lithuanian Cardinal Vincentas SladkeviÁius was also buried in the basilica of Kaunas Cathedral in 2000.
